for its object to provide a simple and effective method of separating the fibres so that the expense of the ordinary chemical or mechanical methods of separation may be avoided and fibre produced of fine quality and capable, for example, in the case of ramie, of being used in substitution of, or in combination with wool and other similar materials.

According to the invention in its application for example, to the treatment of ramie,
I lay the fibre in a thin layer on the ground, and I press the fibre in contact therewith. After allowing it to lie for a few days, I turn it over 1569

and press it in contact with the surface of the earth and allow it to lie for a further few days, and I may turn it over repeatedly and allow the treatment to continue until I find by trial after drying the fibrous substance, that the fibre is readily separated in a shaking machine, and that when ramie or a substance similar to ramie is treated and passed through a carding machine fibre is produced of a fine character having the quality of felting and capable of being used in substitution of, or in combination with wool.

In the treatment of China grass I find that a treatment of 8 to 10 days is generally sufficient. The duration of treatment, however, depends upon the character of the fibrous substance to be treated, and may readily be determined by trial as hereinbefore described.

I bare and level the ground upon which to lay the fibrous substance, and prefer to use ground or earth that has a normal content of moisture.

It will be understood that after subjecting the fibrous substances to the process hereinbefore described, they may be dried and the gummy matter binding the fibres having lost its adhesive quality by the treatment may then be shaken away as dust.

I am aware that it has before been proposed to treat ramie and other similar fibrous substances by their burial in earth.

Having now particularly described and ascertained the nature of my said invention and in what manner the same is to be performed, I declare that what I claim is:-

A process for the treatment of ramie or other similar fibrous substance consisting in laying the raw fibre in a thin layer upon the surface of the ground, which is prepared and levelled to receive it and then pressing the fibre in contact therewith for the purpose and substantially as described.
